

On the Record

McGuireWoods scaling back summer program?

August 14, 2009

Proving that we don't play favorites around here, this post is about bad news at McGuireWoods, which we celebrated just the other day for landing on Working Mother's list of the top 50 firms for women.

A spokesperson for the firm told Above the Law that the firm will probably reduce the number of offices with summer associate programs for 2010. There's some speculation, unconfirmed, that this may translate into no summers in the firm's secondary markets, of which Baltimore is one.

I haven't heard back from McGuire about this yet but will provide an update if I do.

Also, scroll to the bottom of the ATL post to read some allegations of poor on-campus interviewing etiquette on McGuireWoods' part.

Sphere: Related Content

Posted by Caryn Tamber, Legal Writer | Filed Under McGuireWoods, law